GREATEST JURY IN ALL THE WORLD IS RETURNING VERDICT

A Total of 55,000,000 Americans Entitled to Vote Their Choice for President

SOME CLAIM LANDSLIDE

Experts Predict A Landslide For Wendell Willkie For President

By William K. Hutchinson
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—(INS)—The greatest jury in all the world is returning its verdict on the third term issue today as 55,000,000 Americans vote their choice between President Roosevelt and Wendell Willkie in one of the most dramatic presidential elections in history.

The electorate is deciding whether to give Mr. Roosevelt a "vote of confidence" or to turn the New Deal out of power by electing Willkie on his plea to "achieve national unity, provide jobs, restore prosperity and keep America out of war." Both were confident of victory.

Most political experts forecast a close election, with the possibility that New York State may cast the tie. A few experts however predicted a landslide for Willkie.

The Presidential campaign, that started slowly in August, closed with a roar of oratory and dramatic fervor. The President, speaking from his Hyde Park home, asked the nation to join him in a prayer for "national unity"—the same national unity that had been Willkie's campaign slogan for weeks. Mr. Roosevelt read an old prayer asking God "to save us from violence, discord and confusion; from pride and arrogance and from every evil way." And lastly, he prayed:

"Defend our liberties and fashion into one united people, the multitude brought hither out of many kindreds and tongues."

Willkie closed his campaign by predicting his own election, after declaring the voters would choose between "a third term candidate and a new president." Confident of victory, he added:

"If I am elected, we will start this crusade together as a united nation—to return to the things that our God-fearing fathers held dearest: hard work, thrift, charity, honesty and above all, peace through strength."

There were thousands of orators on each side and in the final appeals, the third term issue was dominant.

In the Willkie ranks, the orators struck greater dramatic notes. Typical of them was Bainbridge Colby, Woodrow Wilson's post-war Secretary of State, who declared that the United States faced "the most critical moment."

State Officials Pay Visit To The Schumacher Post

The Commander of the Department of Pennsylvania, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Leo Moerschbacher, accompanied by Albert F. Ceres, Jr., chairman of the public relations committee, paid a visit to Joseph A. Schumacher Post, Thursday evening. Commander Charles U. Pierce, and Adjutant Ralph S. Mattocks received them.

Commander Moerschbacher stressed the value of the V. F. W. as a steady influence on the men now going into camp through the Draft. "The V. F. ## CORN YIELD IN COUNTY TRIFLE LOWER THIS YEAR

Will, However, Yield From 45 to 60 Bushels to The Acre, is Claim

SEASON WAS SHORT

DOYLESTOWN, Nov. 5.—The yield of corn in Bucks County, this year it is believed, will average from 45 to 60 bushels per acre.

Although somewhat lower than usual, the drop is chalked up to the fact that the corn, especially that planted late in the Spring, did not have ample time to mature.

Late planting in the Spring, coupled with the fact that there was an unusually early frost this Fall, curtailed the growing season. Owing to the fact that they got their corn planted late last Spring, many farmers left it standing as long as possible this Fall with

Young Man Who Was Shot Is Removed To Abington

Howard Wilson, 19, of Beaver Dam Road, who was critically wounded when shot by an unidentified assailant as he sat in a parked car on Tyburn Road, Penn Valley, Saturday evening, was removed from Harriman Hospital to Abington Hospital, yesterday afternoon.

Condition of the youth is said by physicians to still be critical. He was taken to the institution at Abington by Bucks County Rescue Squad.

Wilson, who was shot through the left arm, has an "explosive wound," the result of a shot-gun fired at close range.

Wilson states that as he and a young woman sat in the car, a colored man approached the vehicle, and fired directly through the left front window. It was considered a miracle that Wilson was not instantly killed. He was able to drive to the hospital, and with arm hanging limp, applied for aid.

Probe Wreck of Airliner

Salt Lake City, Nov. 5.—The wrecked United Airliner lying high on Bountiful Peak above Centerville, Utah, today became a laboratory for a series of investigations by United Air Lines, the Civil Aeronautics Authority and other officials seeking cause of the crash which killed ten persons.

Checking wreckage of the plane, which crashed yesterday after overshooting the Salt Lake Valley in a snow storm, officials were able to determine little except that the plane apparently had been zooming almost directly into the rugged mountain.

Bases Established

London, Nov. 5.—Formal announcement that British naval and air bases have been established on the island of Crete was made by Prime Minister Churchill in the House of Commons today.

"Forces are in movement to help the Greeks to the utmost of our capacity," he said.

"I can only say we shall do our best."

Fourteen thousand civilians and 300 soldiers have been killed in German air raids on Britain, the Prime Minister revealed.

Twenty thousand civilians and 500 soldiers have been wounded seriously, but casualties are on the decline, he said.

In the course of a general foreign review, Churchill admitted a serious increase in the number of U-boat sinkings. Warning that Britain must expect still heavier attacks, he said there was no doubt the country would pull through.

Churchill said that Britain's inability to use Irish ports constituted a "heavy and grievous burden."

Unrelenting vigilance, the Prime Minister remarked, has transformed invasion danger into "invasion scare."

"That the invasion has not been attempted is one of the historic victories of the British Isles," he said. "Bombing attacks on Italian objectives and bases will continue on an ever-growing scale."

BLAZE DAMAGES HOUSE TO THE EXTENT OF $1,000

Property Owned and Occupied By Cornelius Hines, Wood and Market Streets Afire

BURNED DEBRIS BLAMED

Fire last evening damaged and for a time threatened to destroy the property at Wood and Market streets, owned and occupied by Cornelius Hines, colored.

The blaze was due to a basket of debris which had been burned, being placed too near the rear of the building. The loss is estimated by Chief Hagerman at $1,000 and is insured.

Mr. Hines told Chief Hagerman that earlier during the evening he had burned some debris out in the street, swept up the remains into a basket after pouring water on them. He then sat the basket outside against the rear of the property.

The owner of the property went inside and was sewing buttons on his trousers when someone knocked on the front door and told him his house was afire.

The Bristol Consolidated firemen were called and found the blaze well advanced. The flames had ignited the outside of the building and went up in between the partitions, into an air chamber from which point they advanced still further. The blaze was gotten under control and extinguished after several minutes of hard work on the part of the firemen.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

"Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc."

Incredible Omissions

Washington, Nov. 4. WHOLLY aside from the tradition violated by his candidacy, and whether he wins or loses the election, the calculated strategy of Mr. Roosevelt's campaign will have made it unique in American history. As a result, politicians and political observers must revise their ideas about what can and what cannot be done in running for office in this country.

back on it now, it is almost incredible that any man should have been able to go through a three-month campaign and completely ignore what concededly are the vital questions raised by his candidacy; treat as though not made the most direct and serious charges of the opposition.

—O—
THAT he was able to do these things is certainly a tribute to the unquestioning devotion with which the President has imbued his large following; but certainly, too, it is evidence of extraordinary lack of discrimination and almost limitless credulity. For example, no one disputes that the basic issue in the campaign was the third-term issue. Never before had a President been a candidate for the third time. That simple fact raised questions that went to the very foundations of our system. There were arguments on both sides. Clearly, it was the overshadowing

HITLER'S BLOCKADE

Two recent news items bear out a growing threat in European affairs. One is the announcement of the British Admiralty that in seven days British, Allied and neutral ship losses totalled forty-five vessels. The other is the imminence of Hitler's "total blockade" of the British Empire.

The destruction of English shipping is the more disquieting of the two. It is true that there are factors to offset the seriousness of the figures. The British Ministry of Agriculture has announced that stores of food are sufficient to last well into next year; that the Greek merchant marine has now been placed in English hands, and that the English people may have confidence that measures will be taken to prevent such losses in the future.

But the fact of the loss of 198,000 tons of shipping in that single week, only slightly less than that destroyed in the terrible week of Dunkerque, remains. In 1917 an average loss of 212,000 tons a week brought the people of England to within six weeks of starvation. And the destruction continues. The sinking of the 45,000-ton Empress of Britain has been confirmed by the Admiralty. Almost daily the Nazis claim huge successes in sinkings of convoyed ships.

These facts lend force to Hitler's threat to blockade the British Empire. The purpose of his long-range plans has become increasingly clear—his gradual amalgamation of the countries of Europe for the purpose of instituting a gigantic barter bloc; his drive to cut off the pipe lines of England's provision at Suez, Gibraltar and the West Coast of Africa. Now these latest figures demonstrate his ability to harry shipping around England herself. Instead of England's being able to starve out Germany, the reverse now appears at least possible.

In the last two months England has been undergoing grave and dramatic danger from the air. In that time the sympathy of the American people has been apparent. But it is a trait of the human mind when one grave danger is past to take an over-optimistic view. This trait is often a convenient and pleasant one. But England is now in a spot which, if less dramatic, is no less tight than any she has been in since the beginning of the war.

According to the new count, there are 100 women to every 97 men in the U. S. It is something to have this feeling of being outnumbered explained.

A British sleuth broke a case by pasting together 1,800 pieces of a torn letter. When the League opens a treaty repair service, this is their boy.

"Last May the third-term candidate told us over the radio that we had 1,700 modern tanks and armored cars 'on hand or on order'."

It so happened at that time we had on hand actually 142 tanks and armored cars. All the others—more than 1,500—were ghost tanks and ghost cars.

"TRIAL WITHOUT JURY"

By JAMES RONALD

SYNOPSIS

Two misfortunes have befallen the otherwise happy Osborne family within twenty-four hours. First, his head, Stephen, age 30, lost his job; then, the next morning, a telegram from Aunt Octavia announces the visit that day of this rich but decidedly unpopular relative. Mr. and Mrs. Osborne urge their five children: "to be nice to her." Dorothy, 23, Ann, 19, Michael, 17; Marjory, 14; and Peter, 12, agree to "be like cats around a saucer of cream." The Osbornes have a veteran servant, Hannah Gale, and a visitor, "Uncle" Simon, elderly Bohemian and author of parts. When he learns of Octavia's coming, he decides to leave after telling Ann what a terror her aunt is. On arrival with her elderly maid, Miss Mimms, Octavia starts a fire of criticism. She has startled the family at dinner by mentioning "the misfortune which has befallen your father."

CHAPTER TWELVE

Edith looked at her sister-in-law sharply. "I must ask you, Octavia, to permit my husband to explain to his children as much of his affairs as he sees fit in his own good time." "In the name of your children you have appealed to me for financial assistance," replied Miss Osborne acidly; "and I intend to explain to them why I cannot grant it. The reason is simple: I do not consider my brother deserving of assistance. He has always been weak and lacking in the qualities that are essential in a man if he is to conduct himself with dignity and be regarded with respect."

"It is with no pleasure that I am forced to consider him a failure. He has proved himself incapable of holding a post which entailed little initiative and less mental effort. Although for over twenty-four years he received what most people would regard as an adequate income, he has failed to take the elementary precaution of providing for his family's future. And now he would throw the problem of his children's support on my shoulders as though the responsibility for their existence were mine. Lacking the manhood to approach me in person, he even delegated to your mother the pointless unpleasant task of seeking my aid. Such shiftlessness merits no consideration."

Edith stood up. "Octavia, have you gone mad? I must ask you not to say another word." "Let her go on," muttered Stephen brokenly. "She's right. I am a failure. . . I've failed you all." "Little remains for me to say," continued Miss Osborne blandly. "I have no intention of encouraging my brother's children to become as lazy and inefficient as their father. The possession of money is a sacred trust, not to be considered lightly. I should be false to my trust if I advanced my brother funds to fritter away in indolent and extravagant living."

Octavia unfolded the papers she had taken from her bag. "Not only do I consider it my duty to withhold the assistance he demands but, since my talk with your mother, I have begun to draft a new will which I shall instruct my lawyer to put into legal shape as soon as I return to New York."

"My existing will leaves the income from the bulk of my estate to your father for life, the capital to be divided equally among his children at his death. In my new will—with the exception of a legacy of five thousand dollars a year for life to my servant, Mimms—I intend to leave my entire fortune to various charities which I shall not trouble to name at this time."

Hannah had come into the room while Miss Osborne was talking and stood behind her, holding a tray, and breathing heavily on her neck. "You mean old woman!"

"Hannah!" cried Edith. "For a moment it seemed that Hannah would not be silenced. She glared at the poker-faced Miss Osborne and Peter held his breath in the delicious hope that she was going to bring her laden tray down with a resounding thwack on his aunt's erect head. But without another word she turned on her heel and left the room, slamming the door behind her. She swept into the kitchen and set down the tray with a clatter."

"The miserable old buzzard!" she exclaimed. "What do you think? She's going to make a new will. She's cutting off her own flesh-and-blood and leaving her money to charity. Charity! Her that hasn't an ounce of charity in her whole shriveled carcass."

"Oh dear," breathed Miss Mimms. "And the Osbornes are such nice people, too!" "If you knew them as I do! My blood boils when I think of that dyspeptic old crow sitting at their table, eating their food, and telling them what she's going to do with money that's as much theirs as I if there was any justice in this world. But you'll be all right when she dies—if you can hold on that long. I'd never have believed it of her, but she's actually spared you a thought. Take a deep breath, dear, you're in for a surprise. When she makes this new will she's going to leave you five thousand dollars a year for life!"

Miss Mimms turned very white. The fork with which she had been picking at an omelette dropped with a clatter.

"Five thousand dollars—a—a—a year—"

"For every year of your life! You'll be rich, my dear!"

"For life," repeated Miss Mimms, as though she hardly comprehended. "For life. . ."

She swayed and would have fallen had not Hannah caught her. "Poor dear, you're exhausted. Hannah's going to take you upstairs and tuck you into bed."

"M—Miss Osborne may want me."

"If she does," said Hannah grimly, "it's Hannah Gale who'll give her her answer!"

"There's no need to apologize," said Miss Osborne stiffly. "If my brother's own family cannot treat me with respect, it is likely that his servants will."

"Excuse!" cried Ann suddenly. "You insult and humiliate my father at his own table and sit there talking about respect!"

"I won't have that, Ann," said Stephen sternly. "You will apologize to your aunt immediately."

"Please don't interfere, Stephen," retorted his shocked sister. "Go on, Miss. Let us understand each other. It will be interesting to learn, once and for all, exactly what my niece thinks of me."

Stephen rose unsteadily and stumbled from the room. His sister hardly noticed his going; she was facing her niece with a mirthless smile.

"I'll tell you gladly," said Ann, trembling with anger. "You are a purse-proud, mean, megalomaniac. You talk about your money as though you had it by some divine right. You imagine the Lord gave it to you because you are so superior to the ordinary run of people; and that those who have no money have none because they don't deserve it. The Lord didn't give it to you. Grandfather left it in your charge because he was misguided enough to think that your brother's future would be safe in your hands."

"So. So. Your father told you that, did he?"

"Daddy didn't tell me. I heard the whole story from Uncle Simon. And I know as well as you do that you have absolutely no moral right to give away money that is as much Dad's as yours."

"Simon! That sordid scapegrace! I might have known it!" "Yes, he's a drunkard. He doesn't pay his bills. He doesn't take much care of himself. But I'd rather model myself on him than you. At least, Uncle Simon has a heart and a sense of humor. He has no inflated ideas of himself. But you—you are all conceit! And why? What have you done with your life? You call Daddy a failure, but he's brought five healthy children into the world and made us happy. He's never spent a penny selfishly or uttered an unkind word as long as I've known him. A failure! If Dad's a failure, what on earth is success? What have you done with your life that can begin to compare with the achievements of his?"

"There isn't a charwoman scrubbing floors on her knees who isn't of more use in the world than you. There isn't a mother in a slum who hasn't justified her existence a thousand times more than you ever will. You've done none of the work of the world, you've brought no life into it, you've contributed nothing to its happiness. You eat, sleep, dress, undress, quarrel with your acquaintances, nag your maid; that's your whole life. And when it's all added up, it amounts to less than zero. Seventy years of life—seventy years of ugly futility!"

"And yet, you think you're wonderful! And why? Why? Why? Simply because you've got money. And what gave you the money? Your intrinsic worth? Hardly! An accident of birth, that's what gave it to you. If I'd been born fifty years earlier and you fifty years later, I'd be the aunt and you'd be the niece—and I'd have the money."

"You ought to run for office as a radical," said Miss Osborne dryly. "You have all the tricks of rhetoric and it would be a pity to waste so much energetic venom. But I'm not a fool, you know. I've known all along that I was merely tolerated in this house for the sake of my money."

The Great Game of Politics

issue, the obvious subject of debate, the question upon which the people were most entitled to light.

YET not once in the three months did Mr. Roosevelt so much as refer to it except obliquely, to say that if elected he would not run a fourth time. The second great omission was in connection with the Federal finances. That any President seeking re-election, at any time, could go through an entire campaign without so much as mentioning the state of the National Treasury or touching upon the subject of expenditures and receipts would hardly be believed. But that a President who had expended such vast sums, incurred such undreamed-of deficits, levied such enormous taxes and piled up so unprecedented a debt, could fail to mention the subject was unbelievable.

YET that not only happened but, under his orders, the party platform, on which he stood, refrained from mentioning Federal finances, and no amount of attack or criticism could induce either Mr. Roosevelt or his spokesmen to mention them. No more singular thing has occurred in history—that, after expending untold billions of the people's money, a President could again seek their votes without accounting to the people or refuting the charges that his fiscal policies were in violation of his own promises and had created exactly the national peril of which he had warned before he became President.

OF course, it can be said of these two great omissions that from his standpoint it was exceedingly clever to play the game that way. Obviously, after the Chicago convention, Mr. Roosevelt could not convincingly defend the "draft" in connection with his third nomination, and quite as obviously he could not reconcile his 1932 promises with the state of the Treasury and the size of the governmental expenditures. To have attempted either would have put Mr. Roosevelt wholly on the defensive—and that is a weak position for any candidate.

THESE omissions, therefore, can be justified from the political point of view, as smart strategy. And, except on the score of not being candid with the people, Mr. Roosevelt cannot be blamed for steadfastly keeping away from discussion of his weaknesses. One may deplore the lack of discrimination among the voters which permitted such glaring omissions in a candidate, but it is natural enough in the candidate to try it. The astounding thing is that this candidate could have continued it until the end without arousing a greater public indignation.

IT tends to strengthen the belief that in politics the voters are emotional rather than reasonable; that in general they are affected by the little things and the big things go unnoticed. That is not an encouraging view to take of the electorate, but there is some justification for it. Of course, there was another omission in the Roosevelt campaign—minor compared to the two above dwelt upon, but in its way very revealing. This was the studied omission by Mr. Roosevelt not only to mention Mr. Willkie's name but to acknowledge that there was a candidate against him. That seemed a calculated attempt to belittle the man, a snobbish effort to express contempt of an individual, hard to reconcile with any idea of a big man. It seemed particularly petty for a President.

"Red Cross In Action" Is Attracting Much Attention

To interest members of the nearby communities in "Red Cross In Action," an American Red Cross exhibit, which opens November 6th and will continue through November 11th. It is planned and presented by the Old York Road and Huntingdon Valley Branch, Southeast Pennsylvania Chapter of the American Red Cross. This presentation and display of the activities and work done by the numerous Red Cross departments is the only one in the Southeast Pennsylvania Chapter. An outgrowth of the work done by the late Mrs. Beauveau Borie in creating this Branch, it serves as an inspiration and challenge to all.

To climax the exhibit and launch the roll call, Red Cross volunteers will co-operate with the American Legion in conducting a service on Armistice Day. It will start at 10:30 a. m., November 11th, and will be followed by a tour of the exhibition. On the same day at three p. m., a blind speaker will talk in behalf of the newly-organized Braille department. Following this, "Mobilized for Mercy," a "movie" to formally open the roll call, will be shown.

Other programs scheduled at three p. m., daily are: Thursday, home service; Friday, home hygiene; and Saturday, Junior Red Cross.

LANGHORNE HIGH DEFEATS BRISTOL; SURPRISE UPSET

Redskins Swoop Down On
Bristol to Upset All Pre-
Game Predictions

FINAL SCORE IS 6 TO 0

Game Was Scoreless Until The Final Six Minutes of Play

By Jack Gill

In one of the most stunning upsets ever recorded on a Bucks County schoolboy football field, Langhorne High School, seeking its first major victory of importance in two years, stung Bristol High School here yesterday afternoon by a 6 to 0 count.

This Langhorne team that went winless as well as scoreless until the 1939 season, and up until now one that had registered triumphs over Solebury and Trenton reserves, entered the game as distinct underdogs. Included among their losses was a 47 to 0 rout by Morrisville, attained with four Redskin regulars on the side lines with injuries, and a 42-6 lacing administered by a yet unbeaten Mt. Holly aggregation.

It was just a Langhorne story as the tribe of Redskins swooped down on the Bristolians to upset all pre-game predictions. Playing an instrumental role in the victory was Warren Gotwald, husky Red back, whose fine punting kept the Beckmen in the game.

The fray was scoreless until the final six minutes when Langhorne opened up on two passes. With Warren Gotwalds pitching to Knox, two successive aerials carried to the 45 yard marker to the 10 yard stripe. Three line plays advanced the ball to the three from where Jim Brody dove over for the games only six points.

The alert pass guarding of Norman Knox stymied the Cards last ditch passing schemes as he intercepted three dangerous heaves. Bristol had the better of the game in yardage gained by running, yet they could not break loose up close. In the first quarter they reached the five yard line, only to be halted on a three line tries and an incomplete forward pass.

CROYDON RAMBLERS DEFEAT NEW BRUNSWICK

CROYDON, Nov. 5—On Saturday night the Ramblers defeated the New Brunswick hockey club by the score of 3 to 2 for their third Penn-New Jersey League victory before the largest turnout of spectators this season.

In the first period the game was only two minutes old when Hardy, of New Brunswick, scored the first point of the game to put his team ahead 1 to 0, however this lead didn't last long because of this point of the game the Ramblers went to work and Bill Ritter brought the puck up the floor from his defense position and shot it past goalie Sperling to tie the score at 1 all. This point was quickly followed by a point from the stick of George Ritter on a pass from Bill Ritter this ended the period, score Ramblers, 2; New Brunswick, 1.

In the second period Bill Bell of the Ramblers made the only score on a pass from Elmer Bowers, making the score: Ramblers, 3; New Brunswick, 1.

In the third period New Brunswick tried hard to tie the score but the best they could do was score 1 point by Beregi, and in this period Karasua tried to score a point by first hitting goalie Johnson with his stick, but all that this brought forth was a free for all when the Ramblers rushed to Johnson's aid and fist and stick flew which brought injuries to Karasua and Referee Clayton of Patterson, N. J.

But much to the surprise of the spectators peace was restored and the remaining two minutes of play was completed and final score was Ramblers, 3; New Brunswick, 2.

ST. FRANCIS ELEVEN DEFEATS WINTONA CLUB

EDDINGTON, Nov. 5—Blocking has always been an important part of offensive football and it was clearly demonstrated Sunday as St. Francis 135-pound youngsters registered a 12-0 victory over the popular Wintona Boys Club of Philadelphia.

It took only seven plays to put over the first touchdown. St. Francis did a masterful job as their spectacular fullback, Julius Garcia, raced to touchdown. His try to get the point failed.

Although Wintona was beaten by this touchdown, it was by no means outplayed. In fact, the Wintona eleven had the edge over the Eddington lads, but numerous fumbles halted the offense each time it got into scoring position.

Garcia and R. Palmore sparked a 65-yard drive in the fourth period for the locals second touchdown.

The march started on St. Francis 35, and Palmore's powerful thrusts gradually forced Wintona back. Quarterback Martin's quick starts through the line picked up plenty of yardage, while halfback Rizzello's blocking cleared the way.

When the four-yard line was reached, Palmore slid through Wintona's center for the score. The try for the extra point failed.

ed steadfastly for the cause of human suffering.

Today, as is the case of all such groups, financial aid is required to carry on the work. All organizations, ranging from the large National agencies, such as the Red Cross, Salvation Army, etc., conduct drives for financial assistance.

Over a three-year span, the Bristol group lays claim to 500 free blood transfusions. Members, tested as to the type of their blood are segregated accordingly. When certain types are in need, these members respond and travel to any nearby hospital for transfusions.

All of this is done without any charge whatsoever to the suffering patient. In the name of humanity, these boys offer the assistance sometimes needed to restore a patient to well being.

So far during 1940, the Bristol group has given 198 transfusions. Many times these boys travel in their own cars at their own expense to and from the scene.

During the summer, the association formed a rescue squad and were called to six drownings in the area. On four occasions their assistance aided considerably in recovering victims.

On November 12, the Association will try to raise money by sponsoring a dance revue by pupils of the Granow Dancing Academy at the Grand Theatre. Not asking the community for an outright donation, the intention is to provide entertainment for that evening. They wholeheartedly solicit the patronage of the public which will aid them to carry on their work which benefits the entire community.

Polling places opened at seven o'clock this morning and will remain open until eight o'clock this evening. The great battle of the ballots is underway and all indications point to a tremendous avalanche of votes being cast during the 13 hours the polls are open.

Party workers started out early to get the voters out and some industries in this area are closed all day, while others will close earlier than usual, observing a partial holiday. The banking institutions and places where liquor is dispensed are closed.

The interest in the outcome of the election is running high, and leaders of both parties predict that the voting will be exceptionally heavy.

The candidates for the Presidency, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Democrat; and Wendell L. Willkie, Republican, are the chief centers of interest; while those who are running for the national congress rank a close second.

In the ten polling places in Bristol Borough, six in Bristol Township, and the four in Bensalem Township, voters were getting out early. Workers were of the opinion that a record vote would be cast today in these districts.

By districts Pennsylvania will elect 24 Representatives in Congress, 25 State Senators (odd-numbered districts) and entire membership, 208, of State House of Representatives.

Candidates to be voted for in the nation at large and throughout the state include:

of its history" because "the fate of our democracy hangs in the balance" on the third term issue.

Aside from the Presidency, the voters are electing a new House of Representatives, filling 35 Senate seats, naming 33 new governors and an army of lesser state and local officials. Outcome of the House contests may prove almost as momentous as the Presidential election, since the Republicans expect to gain control of the chamber even if Mr. Roosevelt wins a third term.

With the GOP in power in the House, the Republicans would have a tremendous check rein on the New Deal. Their hopes are based upon private surveys indicating a gain of from 60 to 75 seats over their present strength and they need to gain only 48 seats to win the House. Democratic leaders dispute these claims but private expressions from many Democratic members indicate considerable basis to the Republican forecast.

(Editor's Note—Italian sources likewise claimed steady progress and success for heavy dive-bombing attacks on Greek troop concentrations.)

Corn Yield In County Trifle Lower This Year

the hope that it might have time to mature, but immediately after the heavy frost recently they saw there would be no advantage in leaving it stand.

Because of the short growing season according to C. L. Goodling, of the National Farm School, many of the ears are soft. Mr. Goodling added that ears will have to be exercised in the storing of the corn in the cribs because if it does not have the proper amount of ventilation, it will mould. In the storing of corn, Mr. Goodling suggested that tripods made of lumber and covered either with wire or slats be placed on the floors of the cribs and then the corn can be thrown over it. These tripods, he said, will prevent the corn from becoming packed and the air can circulate through it more readily.

Due to the fact that most of the farmers left the corn standing as long as possible, much of it remains to be husked. A man living not far from Doylestown a few days ago made a tour of the Solebury section and there he found very little corn had been husked. From other sections it has been learned that much corn remains to be husked.

Many farmers in this part of the country during the past few years have been quite successful in their experiments with hybrid corn. Mr. Goodling said a few days ago that the season also was too short for the hybrid corn. Owing to the fact that it has an entirely different root system it has been found that the hybrid corn will not lodge nearly as readily as the ordinary corn.

Farmers throughout the county have filled their silos. This usually is done before the time for husking.

Commenting upon the various types of silage, Mr. Goodling said at the National Farm School approximately 250 tons of soy beans and sorghum corn have been placed in the silos. Ordinarily if only soy beans are placed in the silo it is necessary to add molasses to provide sugar, but if soy beans and sorghum corn are combined, the addition of molasses is not necessary.
